DESCRIPTION OF MATERIAL
DATE OF EXPOSURE as indicated
✓ 1. Leaving main road south of Kazerun, before reaching Shapur. November 1952. ✓ 2. Main highway just north of Isfahan. January 1953. ✓ 3. Road to Fassa (between Sarvistan and Fassa). October 1952. ✓ 4. Road from Shiraz to Bushire, looking north to the Valley of Arjan. November 52. ✓ 5. Valley of Khesht. Jeep route which is not marked. A guide is required here. November 1952. ✓ 6. Road between Shiraz and Firuzabad, just north of Firuzabad. (The road is not this good all the way.) 9 Oct 52. ✓ 7. Near Basht on the back road into the oil producing area -- between Kazerun and Gach Saran. November 1952. 8. A spring with a large flow of good water. West of Fassa, about one mile north of the road to Shiraz. 6 Nov 52. ✓ 9. Main highway north of Shiraz -- first gasoline station north of Shiraz (about 40 miles from Shiraz). (Looking south.) January 1953. 10. Valley just north of Shapur on the road to Fehlian. The notch in the wall is where there was a dam in ancient times. It provides an excellent site for a dam, and would provide irrigation for agricultural purposes. The wall is at the north end of the valley. November 1952.

The Tibetans have a legend that the end of the world will come with the great glaciers of the high Himalaya moving down into the valleys and crushing out all life: a second coming of the Ice Age on earth. Perhaps in an allegorical sense they are right. Communism's icy fingers of polar despotism, silent as darkness, cold and deadly as the avalanches, rigid as the ice, as paralyzing as the storm, is even now on the move. Through Tibet, across Nepal, down the mountain-sides of Sikkim....into India.
